Payments should be verified in detail in the usual manner and the distribution between principal and income carefully inquired into. The trustees commissions should be checked to avoid double commissions. The manner in which the cash is handled should be investigated, in order that the estate may benefit from the interest on cash balances which should be on hand. All securities and bank accounts should be carried in the name of all the trustees as trustees of the estate. Assets and liabilities at the close of the period should be verified in the usual manner. As to assets, care should be taken that the converted assets are legal investments in that state. Acting in behalf of the beneficiaries, the auditor should also note whether investments are being...
